SALVATION WAIFS ROMP AT SEASIDE

About a dozen little folk romped on the wide green lawns of the Seaside Hotel Friday and Saturday afternoons, paddled about in the surf and played on the sandy beach, and late in the afternoon partook of dainty sandwiches and cookies and coco, under one of the shady hau trees, all as the guests of Mrs. Walter Hoffmann. The little guests were all inmates of the Salvation Army home.

The children, boys and girls, arrived shortly after the noon hour. After playing they were given an opportunity to get into the sea water, and how they did enjoy it. It took a corps of adults to look after the youngsters, not one of whom was afraid to get wet. They screamed and voiced their pleasure in many ways.

The little ones are now housed in the new home of the Salvation Army in Manoa valley, which is located beyond the Castle Home. Most of them are waifs in the world, few having other attachments than the warm-hearted self-sacrificing women who conduct the institution. Some were abandoned by fathers, others by their mothers. Many are orphans, but most of them are pretty children. They are not garbed alike in uniforms, but each little child wore a pretty frock. It was difficult to believe that those happy little ones were the flotsam and jetsam of the Honolulu slums, children of mothers and fathers who had lost all sense of parental duty and abandoned them to a capricious world. But all such children are certain of a haven in the Salvation Army, whose watchword is "Need" and with whom race, color or creed makes absolutely no difference. If the Salvation Army has room, or just a cot, a waif is sure of a home. The Salvation Army women rear the children as if they were one big happy family.

Such work as this in this community is worthy of deep interest among the philanthropic residents. A dollar given to this institution, or in fact any department of the Salvation Army, is almost certain to give nearly one hundred cents worth of help to some one. Little money is wasted in administration. The new home in Manoa valley is quite large and is a fine addition to the valley from an architectural standpoint. It is located where the freshest of air blows down from the mountain peaks and where the children can enjoy out-of-door life. The Salvation Army people have worked hard and unceasingly on their home project and are giving to Honolulu what would otherwise have to be supplied through government appropriations. Money is needed now for food, clothing and incidentals. Every little will help.
